Bibliography

Aeschylus. The Oresteia: Agamemnon, The Libation Bearers, The Eumenides. Trans. Robert Fagles. New York: Penguin Classics, 1984. This trilogy of plays celebrates the transition from the culture of the blood clan and blood feud to the institutions of civil society governed by the rule of law. It also memorializes the founding by the goddess Athena of the court of the Areopagus, the same court in which Socrates is later condemned to death.

---. Vita Nuova. Trans. Mark Musa. New York: Oxford, 1992. Dante’s first “published” work, it consists of a collection of poems written over a period of 10 or so years which the author compiled and interwove with an autobiographical commentary shortly after the death of Beatrice, whose story as the object of the author’s romantic adoration is recounted here. It concludes with the promise that the author will write, if God allows, an even more worthy memorial to the virtue of his beloved, a promise which is ultimately fulfilled in The Divine Comedy.

Armstrong, Karen. The Great Transformation: The Beginning of Our Religious Traditions. New York: Anchor Books, 2007. This is an exceptionally insightful and valuable study by an eminent scholar of religion. It traces the simultaneous development during the Axial age (900–300 B.C.E) of a new form of human religious and spiritual sensibility across four distinct cultures: Greek, Hebrew, Chinese, and Indian. It is particularly valuable for indications of how the analysis of the patterns of identity referred to in this course as hero and saint might be extended, with the appropriate qualifications, to non-western cultural traditions.

Augustine, City of God. Trans. Henry Bettenson. New York: Penguin Classics, 2003. Generally regarded as the masterwork of Saint Augustine’s maturity, it seeks to answer charges that conversion to Christianity was bringing about the imminent demise of the Roman Empire, and at the same time sets forth an idealized model of the relationship of secular society to church authority that would guide European social and political thought for the next 1,000 years.

—. Confessions. Trans. Maria Boulding. O.S.B. Hyde Park, New York: New City Press, 1997. This is currently the preferred English translation of Augustine’s classic autobiographical account of his early life and education through his conversion to Christianity and the death of his mother, Saint Monica. It is often identified as a turning point in the evolution of the Western conception of human personal identity.

Ben-Hur. 1959. Along with The 10 Commandments, also starring Charlton Heston, this film helped to establish the genre of biblical epic as one of the most widely popular in American cinema.

Bodo, Murray. Tales of St. Francis: Ancient Stories for Contemporary Living. Cincinnati: St. Anthony Messenger Press, 1992. Modern retellings of some of the stories in I Foresi (The Little Flowers) of Saint Francis. The Little Flowers are a kind of Franciscan gospel, and Bodo is gifted at capturing their enduring spirit and conveying it in contemporary terms. He is the author of many books on Saint Francis and Saint Clare. A very reliable guide.

Brown, Raymond E. The Churches the Apostles Left Behind. Mahwah, New Jersey: Paulist Press, 1984. An informative and influential account of the diversity that characterized the early Christian communities as a result of the adoption and adaptation of the preaching missions of individual apostles.

Campbell, Joseph. The Hero With a Thousand Faces. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1948. This book established Campbell's reputation as a preeminent interpreter of comparative mythology. It introduces the concept of the "monomyth" as the pattern of heroic identity which repeats itself with variations across a broad range of world cultures.

——. The Myth of Sisyphus and Other Essays. Trans. Justin O'Brien. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1961. Using the character of Sisyphus, Camus offers his unique interpretation of the absurd as a characterization of the universal human condition, and also as the universal condition of the kind of happiness, which is the authentic fulfillment of human freedom.

Casablanca. Warner Brothers, 1942. Consistently one of the top five most influential and popular films of the 20th century. The film’s protagonist Rick offers an important perspective on the figure of the secular saint.

Coles, Robert. Flannery O’Connor’s South. Athens, Georgia: University of Georgia Press, 1993. A fascinating study by the well-known Harvard psychiatrist drawing on his personal experience in the South during the civil rights movement.

Cook, William R., and Ronald B. Herzman. The Medieval World View: An Introduction. New York: Oxford University Press, 2004 (2nd ed.). This book makes a good introduction to the earlier lectures of this course and supplements materials on the Middle Ages not discussed here. Cook and Herzman also have an excellent course on Augustine’s Confessions available through The Teaching Company.

———. From Religion to Philosophy. Princeton University Press, 1991. Although some of the scholarship has been replaced, the general lines of this analysis of the inseparability of Greek religion and philosophy remain cogent and relevant.

Darwin, Charles. On the Origin of Species. 150th Anniversary ed. New York: Signet, 2003. One of the most original and influential books in the history of Western science, it provoked the debate that still rages between intelligent design and evolutionary theory.

Dostoevsky, Fyodor. The Brothers Karamazov. Trans. Constance Garnett. London: William Heinemann, 1912 (1951). Dostoevsky’s masterpiece; this is a classic study of the problem of evil and the possibilities of forgiveness portrayed across the members of one family.

Fitzgerald, Sally, ed. The Habit of Being: Selected Letters of Flannery O’Connor. New York: Farrar, Straus, and Giroux, 1979 (1999). O’Connor was a prolific letter writer; this collection sheds important light on her life, her insightful analysis of Southern culture, and on many of her individual stories and career as a writer.

Frankl, Viktor. Man's Search for Meaning. Trans. Ilse Latch. Boston: Beacon Press, 2006. This best-known of the works of Victor Frankl has been recognized as one of the 10 most influential books of the 20th century in America. Composed of two parts: The first is a memoir of Frankl’s experiences and reflections while in a Nazi death camp; the second is a brief overview of logotherapy, Frankl’s distinctive style of psychoanalysis.

Gore, Al. An Inconvenient Truth: The Planetary Emergency of Global Warming and What We Can Do About It. Emmaus, Pennsylvania: Rodale, 2006. This book was the basis both for a widely distributed film by the same title and for Gore’s receipt of both the Nobel Peace Prize and an Academy Award in 2007.

Hibbard, Howard, and Shirley G. Hibbard. Michelangelo. A valuable scholarly and interpretive relation of Michelangelo’s life to his works, as well as his poems and letters.

It’s a Wonderful Life, 1946. A cinematic classic starring Jimmy Stewart; in some ways, Hollywood’s version of Charles Dickens’s A Christmas Carol.

McCrae, John. "In Flanders Fields." In Flanders Fields and Other Poems. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1919. (n.b. also available in many poetry anthologies) John McCrae, a surgeon in the Canadian army during World War I, wrote this poem after the death of a friend and fellow soldier in 1915 near Ypres. The poem is often read at war memorial ceremonies.

——. The Gay Science. Trans. Walter Kaufman. New York: Vintage (Random House), 1974. Written in the still formative stage of Nietzsche’s development, it offers important insights into the development of leading themes such as power, the proclamation that “God is dead,” as well as the theme of eternal recurrence. It also contains much of Nietzsche’s own poetry, an indication of the relevance of the title which is based on a then widely known reference to “the art of poetry,” with a direct connection back to the Provençal troubadour tradition.

——. Thus Spoke Zarathustra. Trans. Graham Parkes. New York: Oxford University Press, 2005. Nietzsche's most emblematic work, loosely based on the historical figure Zoroaster, the Persian religious sage. The figure of Zarathustra as portrayed by Nietzsche in this quasi-mythical, quasi-biblical fiction has his identity primarily as the prophet of a new type of messianic figure, the “one who is to come,” the Übermensch, or “overman,” the culturally evolutionary successor to what Nietzsche regarded as the decadent modern individual.

——. The Will to Power. Trans. Walter Kaufmann and R. J. Hollingdale. New York: Vintage, 1968. A highly problematic work published after Nietzsche’s death, first by his sister and literary executor, later revised and critically analyzed, the work nonetheless contains important authentic contributions to Nietzsche’s mature philosophical viewpoint.

——. Mystery and Manners, Occasional Prose. Ed. Sally and Robert Fitzgerald. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1970. As with her letters, Flannery O’Connor’s short essays, speeches, and other occasional prose provide an extraordinarily valuable insight into her personality, her work, her society, as well as to her distinctive imagination and sensibility as a Christian.

Ormond, John. "The Gift." Selected Poems. Bridgend: Poetry Wales, 1987. John Ormond, a Welsh poet and filmmaker, joined the staff of Picture Post in 1945 and, in 1957, began what was to be a distinguished career with BBC Wales as a director and producer of documentary films. Ormond returned to poetry in the mid-'60s, having destroyed much of his early poetry. His first major volume Requiem and Celebration was published in 1969, and his reputation was enhanced in 1973 by the appearance of Definition of a Waterfall and his inclusion in Penguin Modern Poets. A volume of selected poems was published in 1987.

Sartre, Jean-Paul. Existentialism is a Humanism. Trans. Philip Mairet. London: Methuen, 1948 (1982). First delivered as a popular lecture, this brief essay was intended by Sartre to be a defense of existentialism against the charges of nihilism directed at his thought and the existentialist movement as a whole. While having genuine value as a snapshot of certain key Sartrean themes, it can nonetheless be misleading because of its failure to convey the careful phenomenological bases for Sartre’s conception of human existence and freedom: worked out so carefully and extensively in his earlier works, The Transcendence of the Ego, and the monumental Being and Nothingness.

The Searchers*. Warner Brothers, 1956. An iconic example of the contribution to the American Western genre by director John Ford, along with such other classics as Stagecoach, Fort Apache, She Wore a Yellow Ribbon, and The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance.

Sergeant York*, 1941. Directed by Howard Hawks, the film is based on the true story of a country boy who is a conscientious objector who becomes a World War I hero.

Shane, 1953. Arguably, along with High Noon, the paradigmatic film representation of the American Western hero.

—. String Quartet no. 8. Emerson String Quartet. Deutsche Grammophon, 1999. Dedicated to victims of fascism and totalitarianism, this quartet was composed around the same time that Shostakovich was writing music for a propaganda film about the firebombing of Dresden, and presents a powerful artistic response to the force of violence.

The Ten Commandments, 1956. Together with Ben Hur, also starring Charlton Heston, this film established the genre of biblical epic.

Washington, James Melvin, ed. A Testament of Hope: The Essential Writings of Martin Luther King, Jr. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1986. This comprehensive anthology collects a wide range of writings of Martin Luther King Jr., including speeches, sermons, and essays, as well as interviews with King. A valuable resource for readers who want to delve deeper than King’s more well-known and oft-quoted works.

—. Notebooks. Trans. Arthur Wills. New York: G.P. Putnam’s Sons, 1956 Both this work and Selected Essays below collect essays and writings by Weil on a variety of topics. However, as both books may be difficult to obtain, the following widely available anthology is recommended for readers seeking an overview of Weil’s writings.

—. Selected Essays 1934–1943. Trans. Richard Rees. Oxford University Press, 1962. Both this work and Notebooks above collect essays and writings by Weil on a variety of topics. However, as both books may be difficult to obtain, the following widely available anthology is recommended for readers seeking an overview of Weil’s writings.

Zilboorg, Gregory. “Fear of Death.” Psychoanalytic Quarterly 12 (1943), 465–475. Cited by Ernest Becker in The Denial of Death as providing important evidence in support of Becker’s claim that terror in the face of death is the central formative dynamic in human psychological life.
